The separation, therefore, from the anconvention of the two branches of the church, clerical and lay, within the boundaries of West Virginia, for the purposed of electing a Bishop and otherwise setting the new house in order. This convention will, we presume, he called at an early day, and will probably meet in this city. As to who will be the new Bishop, that is a matter of pure speculation as yet, but we understand it will probably be a minister from without the State. We presume that there will be no such difficulty in respect to any candidate whom the clergy and lairy of the West Virginia church may select. It is safe to say that he will not be a Churchman of the De Koven zehool, although it has been intimated that West Virginia is not as sound ("low Church") as the old Virginia Church. Virginia is, par excellence, the low Church diocese of the country. Like good Queen Victoria, the head of the English Church, whom the Presbyterians English Church, whom the Presbyterians applauded in their Council, she comes almost down to the common level of all the Protestant Churches. Mr. Latane, late of this city, was a fair type of the whole Virginia church, and it will be remembered that one of his arguments in his memorable pamphlet was in favor of recognizing and fellowshipping all evangelical Protestant churches. His cause of difference was not particularly with the Virginia church, but ratter with the fact that she was overshadowed in the general councils of the church, and made to be "particeps criminis," as it were, in the countenance of uncanonical doctrines and practices.
